In Times of Economic Uncertainty, the Foundation of Manganaro Midatlantic's Success Resides in Their Employees

PR Newswire
 BELTSVILLE, Md., Aug. 29, 2012

BELTSVILLE, Md., Aug. 29, 2012 /PRNewswire/ -- In May 2012, the US Bureau of Labor Statistics measured employee turnover rate in the construction industry at 6.5%. With only 1.2% of jobs opening in that same month, 5.3% of workers within this industry will not likely be able to find similar work.¹ One subcontracting firm continues to build upon more than 50 years of successful worker satisfaction, retaining talented employees, and helping to reduce the construction industry's unemployment rate through their continued growth.

Manganaro Midatlantic (www.manganaro.com/midatlantic) has been providing exceptional drywall, masonry, and restoration services for commercial customers throughout the Maryland, Washington, DC, and Virginia areas since 1958. By exceeding customer expectations while using teams, workers, and resources effectively, Manganaro finishes projects with the highest level of professional service based upon their industry-leading teams of experts. This enables the company to continue their successful track record of large-scale projects, ensuring their ability to hire and retain 850 valuable employees that make Manganaro a success.

Manganaro Midatlantic has taken huge steps to reshape the corporate climate to maximize worker satisfaction, efficiency and, in turn, employee retention with their proven, proprietary One Voice, One Team Management System. This system develops well-informed project managers who are cross-trained on all areas of the project to better supervise, motivate, and guide teams to successful project completions.

"Throughout the implementation of the One Voice, One Team Management System, we have continuously received positive feedback from our employees and customers," explains John Livingston, Manager of Business Development for Manganaro. "We pride ourselves on the system's ability to make Manganaro a company where employees genuinely enjoy working and continue to stay for many years."

Manganaro Midatlantic has attained a stellar record of successful project completions over the years and attributes this to the One Voice, One Team Management System's ability to retain the company's valuable employees during the most challenging of economic times.
